

I wasn't aware of your presence.

The artist Nakayama has been painting close-up female portraits since 2001.

These beautiful yet simple faces have pureness and tranquility that are contained under the layers of translucent colors.

If you let your eyes move across the surface of the painting; texture of her fine skin and shiny colors of her hair, you may stop and get attracted to her impressive eyes. Even though her eyes seem to be gazing beyond us audience.

"I want to express my inner image through painting portraits by incorporating renaissance painting of abbreviation and exaggeration, and pop art composition."

As he talks about his own work, the painter reflects the world of change and memories of faces he encounters in his daily life onto his female portraits.

Impression of these faces are being a mirror to reflect the viewer's inner mind, while her and our eyes will ever meet even though we are in presence, standing in front of her faces.

"There are things that change and unchanged over time" He adds. Please enjoy the gaze of the painter in the spring green Shiga Kogen.
